2.3.2 Students mentoring system available in the institution? Give details (maximum 500 words.)

The process of mentoring is an individualized system of counselling and guidance activities. An institution's concern is not solely confined to academic learning, rather comprehensive growth of its pupils. Bearing in mind, the increasing relevance of a sound mind and soul and in an attempt to achieve an apt synchronization of the social, mental and emotional facets of a learner, mentoring system for the students comes to play its part.

Addressing the needs of the students for a friend and a confidante, afore-mentioned process fills the gap which is otherwise left in the conventional pedagogical system. With the process in practise, a teacher is in a position to build a sound rapport with his/her students. Mentoring is delivered to students both at undergraduate as well as post-graduate level wherein every pupil becomes an object of scrutiny in a bid to exact favourable and result driven outcomes.

Induction programs are organized for the freshers to acquaint them with the infrastructure, an all inclusive curriculum, reasonably flexible teaching and learning methodologies orchestrated to match up with the digital era and stressing the need for the extra co-curricular activities.

A special Counseling Cell is exclusively made for students to solve problems in concern with academics, career advancement or personal issues. These bodies operate in a formal as well as informal locales. A student is at an absolute liberty to approach the teacher who is readily available at his disposal. For teachers, the student is like a blank canvas whom they can illumine, mould and subsequently transform into sensible and rational individuals. Their advice holds monumental place in carving out the personality of the student. Seeking their help a student can envision those horizons of opportunity which otherwise remain difficult to invade.

Counselling form are maintained by the mentors which includes personal information, previous academic record, academic performance, scholarships/awards received and extra co-curricular activities. The mentors meet the students periodically to monitor their performance. Psychometric tests and SWOT analysis are the student-centric tools employed to yield fruitful outcomes.
